

Here comes the bee

The children elect two leaders. These two are named with something sweet or great or good (I'm in the ring, says one with diamond stones, I'm a nice ice cream, chocolate syrup and plenty else says).

Then stand by one another (opposite) and the other children make a tail and two children hit their hands as arch spend less than others singing: "I spend goes to the bee and the melissotpoula paidopoula, paidopoula." They stop at a kid that time passes beneath the arch and telling secrets in his ear what they have put it to choose.

That's the one usually says without saying, what is what. When the child asked "ice cream" (say) goes behind him who has been called "ice" and keeps him from the waist. The same is repeated for all children to choose. There are two chains at the end. Heads grabbed by the arms and pulled back from the children. Whichever team grab another win.

MAKRIA GAIDOURA

The players are divided into two groups. The leader of the first group standing with his back to the wall holds the shoulders of one player team, which is tucked in the face to the leader. The other team mates sit hunched one behind the other, behind the first player, and held firmly by the waist. The leader of the other team starts running quickly and jumps across the group, trying to sit as close as possible to the head, so that there is enough space for all the players of his team. The other players do the same. If you fit all and no one touches his foot down, as it is sitting in the back of the other team, you win. The game is repeated with another group to do the "gaidoura".

Ziziros game

This is a traditional game played on easter and the days after. One person has to cover his eyes while one of the rest behind him hits him on the back, sometimes softly, sometimes hard! The person has to guess who hit him and if he is correct that person who hitted him takes his place. Immediately after the hit all the persons make a "zzzz" sound like a cicada (ziziros) and wave a finger in circles, so as to confuse the unlucky one.
